Curtis Osterloh is a partner in law firm of Scott, Douglass & McConnico, L.L.P. in Austin, Texas. He practices in state and local taxation in the areas of sales and use, franchise, margin, income, oil & gas, insurance, mixed beverage and motor vehicle tax. Mr. Osterloh has represented taxpayers in hundreds of administrative protests of tax assessments and refund denials before various state and local taxing authorities. His practice also includes appealing assessments, and refund denials to district and appellate courts.

Mr. Osterloh has over thirty years of experience in tax controversy. During this time, he has settled hundreds of contested audits, refunds, administrative appeals and district court cases with the Texas Comptroller of Public Accounts and Texas Attorney General along with other state taxing authorities. Mr. Osterloh's practice also includes advising clients concerning the taxability of transactions and obtaining letter rulings from state taxing authorities.

Mr. Osterloh is a frequent lecturer and author on a variety of tax topics, including all aspects of Texas state and local taxation, as well as state and local tax issues relating to multistate operations. Mr. Osterloh has lectured at programs presented by Council on State Taxation (COST), Institute of Professionals in Taxation (IPT), the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants, Tax Executives Institute, Inc. (TEI), and other professional education providers. He is a member of the Texas Bar and the Texas Society of Public Accountants. Mr. Osterloh is an honors graduate of both Boise State University and the University of Texas School of Law. Before attending law school, Mr. Osterloh worked as revenue agent for the IRS.

His hobbies include history and traveling. He also enjoys keeping current on world events, both international and domestic politics.
